Most guardianship orders are plenary, although the court limit areas of decision making by the guardian.	An independent adult may sign a power of attorney, and authorize an "attorney" to decide on matters related to his/her person and/or estate, but once a person has signed a power of attorney, it will be the later one's decision to ask for a court authorized guardian/trusteeship order, if he/she deems it appropriate and surrender the decision making powers to the State, who may then appoint a guardian.	The 1962 Capacity and Guardianship Act prevails, although various aspects were amended over the years, by introducing several regulations like, moving the jurisdiction of guardianship issues from the District Court to the Family Court, placing the Ministry of Welfare as the respondent for whenever an application for a guardianship order is filed, and regulating the guardian's remuneration.	When any one thinks that an adult is unable to assume the necessary responsibilities expected and therefore he/she places him/herself at risk, one may file an application to adjudicate the person as a ward if this application is supported by a psychiatrist affidavit that indeed the person is at risk, the court would ask a social worker to identify the person that should be the guardian.	Every adult person or an entity can be the appointed guardian, yet in most instances it is a family member	A person or an agency who finds that a person is unable to take care of him/herself, and may be at risk of harming his/her interests can apply for a court order to place a person under a guardianship order, provided the application is supported by a psychiatrist affidavit, that on firms and supports the request. The court asks thereupon for a social worker's report on the needs of the alleged ward and the identity of a proposed guardian. When a court issues a guardianship order, acopy of the order is sent to the national guardian officer (seated in the government's Justice Department), who is Court's long arm of overseeing that the ward's interests are not jeopardized.	By definition, persons placed under a guardianship order, are wards of the State, and therefore, the national guardian officer is the one to whom all personal guardians must report annually on all matters related to the ward's person and his/her estate.	The costs related to providing the guardianship service are been paid by the ward and subjected to the court's approval. The guardian's fee is set by law, and subjected to the court's approval (the guardian must file an application to be paid for his/her services); it is app. 425 NIS, a month for a ward who lives in an institution and twice as much (i.e., app. 850 NIS a month) for a ward who lives in the community (1 $ = 4.65 NIS). A guardianship order would be removed very rarely; therefore once a person is adjudicated a ward, he/she will remain a ward for as long as they live.

Japan:	As a result of the 2000 reform the old legal terms of kin-chisansha (those who are incompetent in the management of their property) and jun-kin-chisansha (those who are quasi-incompetent) were replaced by the new legal terms kohken seido (guardianship system) and hosa seido (curatorship system). Also, a totally new type of guardianship system was introduced: the new hojo seido system (which is translated in English as "help system" or "advisory system").	Possible via voluntary guardianship.	2000.	The subject person is insufficiently capable of making sound judgements due to impairment of his or her mental facilities (Article 14, § 1 of the Voluntary Guardianship Law).	The new legal mechanism allows any adult person with sufficient mental capacity to voluntarily nominate a "legal" person (mostly a family member) or other entity (including a for-profit organization) to be his or her legal "guardian by contract". This new legal system, which allows competent adult to maintain their autonomy by providing advance directives, follows along the lines of the American durable power of attorney.	According to the new hojo seido system, the family court may appoint a hojonin (a helper) for those who suffer from mild mental or intellectual disability. Once a hojonin is appointed to an elderly person, the principal does not lose his or her legal status or independence. Specific acts (which are to be decided by the family court) need to be decided jointly by the person and the hojonin in order to be valid. In comparison to the old system which focused on protecting and preserving the property of the incapable person, guardians under the new system are responsible for health, medical care, housing, and other conditions of daily living.	The specific terms of voluntary guardianship nomination are detailed in the designated contract and registered under an "adult guardianship registration system", which provides the formal backing for this voluntary procedure. Under the voluntary guardianship system, a person does not fully avoid the formal aspects of guardianship. The contractual agreement takes effect only after the fulfillment of formal legal processes, including formal registration and the appointment of a supervisor over the voluntary guardian.	The family court is responsible for controlling.

Guardianship Act 1987
(NSW)

Appointment by Guardianship Tribunal:

- Guardians may be appointed for personal decisions.
- Financial Managers may be appointed for financial decisions.

Protected Estates Act 1983
(NSW) provides for appointment of a financial manager by the NSW Supreme Court, a Magistrate or the Mental Health Review Tribunal.

NSW's Powers of Attorney Act 2003 enables a competent person to make an enduring power of attorney which empowers the attorney to make financial decisions.

The Guardianship Act 1987 enables the appointment of an enduring guardian to make personal decisions. The Guardianship Tribunal can review an enduring power of attorney and an appointment of an enduring guardian if there are concerns that these arrangements are not working in the best interests of a person with a decision making disability.

Any person with a genuine concern for the welfare of a person with a decision making disability may apply to the Tribunal for the appointment of a guardian or financial manager.

Where a person has executed an enduring power of attorney or enduring guardianship appointment, the enduring power of attorney can be exercised from the date of signing and continues notwithstanding incapacity whereas an enduring guardianship appointment only takes effect when the person loses capacity to make personal decisions.

Public guardians are available for appointment under guardianship orders.

Any person over 18 years of age can be appointed as a guardian by an enduring guardianship appointment or by the Guardianship Tribunal.

The Guardianship Tribunal can appoint a private person as guardian if satisfied they are willing and able to be a guardian, have no conflict of interest and are compatible in personality with the person with a decision making disability.

If there is no suitable private guardian available, the Tribunal can appoint the Public Guardian. The Public Guardian is a guardian of last resort.

A private person can be appointed as a financial manager if they are a suitable person to undertake that role. The Public Trustee or private trustee companies can be appointed as a financial manager.

The Protective Commissioner may also be appointed as a

Tribunal convenes open hearings, hears evidence and receives reports regarding the person's disability, incapacity and need for a substitute decision maker. The person with a disability has a right to attend, be heard and be represented. Guardianship orders are for limited duration and are reviewed at the end of their term (usually 12months for the initial order then every 3 years for renewed orders). Reviews of the order can also be requested before the order ends. Financial management orders are continuous but the Tribunal may review them if requested to do so.

Appeal mechanisms exist to the NSW Administrative Decisions Tribunal or the NSW Supreme Court.

The Tribunal may give the guardian directions on request but does not directly supervise guardians. When reviewing a guardianship order, the Tribunal can consider whether the guardian should be replaced.

The Tribunal does not supervise financial managers. Applications can be made to the Tribunal for a financial manager to be replaced. Private financial managers must file accounts with the Protective Commissioner. .

Specific decisions of the Public Guardian and the Protective Commissioner can be reviewed by the NSW Administrative Decisions Tribunal.

charged with the approval of the Minister.

There are no fees to make an application to the Guardianship Tribunal.

Private guardians cannot charge fees for performing their duties as guardian. The Public Guardian is publicly funded, i.e. no cost to the person with a disability.

The Protective Commissioner charges management fees for supervising private financial managers and also for directly managing a person's estate.

Where a trustee company, including the Public Trustee, is the appointed financial manager then fees are charged on a commission basis.

Where private persons are appointed as financial manager, they cannot charge fees to the person whose estate is under management.

The Netherlands:
16,4 Mio inhabitants/ 12.000 wards.
Approx. 85% of the guardians are family members. 500 guardians are volunteers.

There are three measures in Dutch law. The measures for incapable adults are full guardianship (Curatele covering both the financial and the non-financial interests), protective trust (Bewindvoering, solely dealing with money & goods) and partial guardianship for the person (Mentorschap, for treatment, care and support including living conditions).

Powers of Attorney are not common in the Netherlands. The law is not tailor-made for the situation: Once the adult, who has given the power, loses his actual capability, the Dutch Civil Code does not provide for additional protection.

Human and patient' rights required flexible and tailor-made measures of protection. The law on Mentorschap was introduced in 1995. At this moment there is a discussion to make Mentorschap more like how Bewindvoering is organised. There is also a development to create regional organisations with volunteer guardians for the person all over the country.

Someone can apply for himself, the family can ask for guardianship, and public prosecutor can do so. An institution can make a request to the judge for a Mentorschap over one of the inhabitants.

Both a person and an agency can fill in Bewindvoering. Guardian for the pesron: every adult can be the appointed guardian, yet in most situations it is a family member. The judge will decide if someone is capable or not. If the person is under guardianship himself he or she cannot be a guardian..

The judge investigates the necessity and assesess the capability and suitability of the candidate -guardian. The judge gives a written instruction to the guardian. The function of the guardian is in principle for life.

The judge can demand the guardian for a written rapport annually. This is practise in cases of Curatele and Bewindvoering (financial reports). But written rapports are seldom asked for in cases of Mentorschap.

The ward pays the costs related to providing the guardianship services. The judge fixes the amount of the expenses and the reward to be paid back to the guardian. Volunteers will get 250 €per year. Bewindvoering: First year 850 € Second and on: 750 € Family members and partners acting as guardians do not receive a reward.
